Talking About My Dreams

If not for the journal assignment of my English class, probably I’ll not put my fingers on the keyboard to strike some words now. I have not sit down to write something about my thoughts, my life or others like this for many years, even I was dreaming about becoming a writer when I was a little boy.

I was interested in writing when I studied in elementary school. I was sent to participate in many contests about writing (of course in Chinese.) I even join a writing class to learn how to write from an amateur writer, Mr. Chou, I still remember his name till now.

Almost every child has thought about being a scientist and I am no exception. I would like to be a mathematician in my junior high school days. But sooner I found that I was not smart enough to achieve this. Another dream of mine during those days is being an artist. I also like drawing, such as sketching, water color-painting, and the Chinese Calligraphy. There are still some works finished then left in my hometown, Keelung.

The only dream of mine achieved now is becoming a computer programmer. I read some stories about programmers on TV and I thought it’s so cool to become a programmer. I attended my first computer class in the first winter vacation of my junior high school and finally get my first computer in the first summer vacation of senior high school, which is an IBM compatible PC of 80486 DX4-100 CPU.

Now I am going to leave school next year and join the military service. After that, I will starting my career life and I wish I should never forget those dreams I’ve ever dreamed about.
